

SANFORD TAKES CONTROL.

P. J. GLEASON YIELDS TO A SHOW OF FORCE.

HE LEAVES THE MAYOR'S OFFICE IN THE CITY HALL OF LONG ISLAND CITY AND OPENS NEW QUARTERS IN FRONT-ST.—HE SAYS HE IS FOLLOWED BY DETECTIVES.

The crisis in the Long Island City Mayor's office came at 10:40 a. m. yesterday when Horatio S. Sanford, at the head of seventy-five of his followers, burst Patrick J. Gleason out of the City Hall office. The turning out was not accomplished without a great deal of excitement, and it looked at one time as if the affair would end in bloodshed. Up to yesterday morning, Chief of Police Woods and twenty officers guarded the City Hall, refusing to recognize orders from the Sanford Police Board. Shortly after 9 o'clock, the news spread that Woods had sworn allegiance to Sanford.

When John Sullivan, president of the Gleason Police Board, heard of Woods' defection, he told the policemen to return to their station houses. Mr. Sanford was immediately informed of Captain Woods' change of mind. By this time the City Hall was crowded. All were waiting for the arrival of Mr. Sanford. Mayor Gleason sat in his office, writing a letter to his daughter, who is at a boarding school. He calmly awaited the climax, and it came when Mr. Sanford pushed his way through the crowded corridors and stepped into the Mayor's office. As Sanford entered Gleason arose and extended his hand. The rivals shook hands, and Mayor Sanford said:

"I am here again, Mr. Gleason, as the Mayor of this city, to demand that you vacate this office and turn it over to me."

Gleason replied: "I have but one thing to say. I am Mayor of this city, and have been since the 1st of January last, when I received my certificate of election and took the oath of office. If you have an order upon me from the courts demanding my removal, I will obey it. Otherwise I cannot yield to your demand."

REMOVING PATRICK J. GLEASON.

Up to this time everything had been orderly, but as Mr. Gleason ceased speaking, Sanford's private secretary, George R. Crowley, who was standing close behind his chief, shouted:

"Put him out!"

This cry was taken up by 250 throats. Great excitement prevailed and several revolvers were displayed. Gleason stepped forward and commanded silence. Then he said:

"I defy a mob. You may put me out by force; 250 against one man is possible, but that doesn't make your title clear, or cloud mine; so do your worst."

The excitement increased, and the crowd surged toward the speaker. At that moment Police Captain Woods entered the room, forced his way to the railing, and, turning to the crowd, exclaimed:

"Every man who is not an official will leave this room, and leave it immediately."

After the room had been cleared of all except about twenty persons, the Captain, turning to Mayor Sanford, said:

"Mr. Sanford, what are your orders to me. I recognize you as Mayor."

Mayor Sanford replied: "I order you to eject Patrick J. Gleason from this room."

The Captain placed his hand upon the shoulder of his former superior, and said: "Mr. Gleason, you must leave this room."

"I decline, as Mayor of this city. You must use force," answered Gleason.

Officer Welch stepped up and both captain and patrolman began to pull the big Mayor toward the gate.

"Stop! That is sufficient!" said Gleason. "You

NEW-YORK ENJOYING FINE WEATHER.

CLEAR AIR, MODERATE TEMPERATURE AND BRIGHT SUNLIGHT MADE A GLORIOUS DAY YESTERDAY.

New-York saw another beautiful winter day yesterday. The air was so clear and pure that it was life and health to drink it in. It was invigorating and inspiring. No better winter day could be devised. The thermometer recorded a temperature which after daylight never got above 26 degrees, and was always below 29 degrees. The prospects are that it will be as pleasant today as it was yesterday. There may be occasional snow flurries, but they will amount to nothing, and the day will be as pure and wholesome as yesterday was.

The boys were free from ice yesterday, except for the fringe packed around the Long Island shore. That ice was soft and spongy and offered no impediment to navigation. In the East River the ice made a big show in the morning and spread out over the surface of the waters. The warm weather, however, rendered the semi-congealed mass harmless, and altogether, on land and sea, it was a pleasant day, and if Mr. Dunn has any influence it will be just as pleasant today.

HEAVY ICE IN THE SOUND.

Bridgeport, Conn., Jan. 21.—For the first time in eighteen years the Sound is frozen beyond the Bridgeport Light, and thousands of people each day visit the veteran lighthouse keeper, Captain Adolphus McNeill, who has been keeping since the establishment of the light, forty-one years ago. Brevets and owners of horses and sleighs ride out to the light, a distance of more than a mile. The keeper's mail was delivered today by a letter-carrier.

The People's Line steamers will not try to plough through the ice any longer, the company having declined to receive any more freight at present. The City of Bridgeport is disabled on the drydock in New York, and the Rosedale made the run last night, but will not try it again. The Nuxem State is still running.

The Sound is frozen over from the shore to Captain's Island, a narrow sandbar three miles out, where a foghorn is stationed. Many persons walked to the island yesterday. This has happened but once or twice in the memory of the oldest inhabitants.

LIVES LOST BY AN ICEBERG BREAKING.

Belmont, Ky., Jan. 21.—The ice-gorge here broke yesterday, leaving death and destruction in its wake. The Government steamer Kirus and several barges were caught in the ice jam and sent to the bottom of the river. The steamer and barges are a total wreck. Three colored deckhands who were on the barges perished before assistance could reach them.

Belmont was valued at $50,000 and the barges at $60,000. The Kirus left Cairo last Sunday with two barges of fuel for its fleet at Ashport, and was obliged to wait at Belmont for the breaking of the gorge at Hickman. The gorge at Belmont, afterward formed, and when it broke she was literally torn to pieces.

SUFFERING FROM NEW-BERKEY.

Mount Holly, Jan. 21.—The long-continued cold weather has impoverished many families here, and the applications for relief from the town have been greatly increased. So extensive have been the calls upon the town fund that it has been exhausted, and a special meeting will be held on Monday, when it is expected that the taxpayers will authorize the issuance

VICHY.

ST. YORRE, BUISSE-SPRING.

THE WATER FROM THE REIGNER SPRING BEING THE COLDEST OF ALL THE SPRINGS AT VICHY (FRANCE), RETAINS MOST ITS MINERALIZING PROPERTIES, AS, ACCORDING TO THE UNANIMOUS OPINION OF THE DOCTORS PRACTISING AT VICHY, "ONLY COLD WATERS OUGHT TO BE EXPORTED."

49 PER CASE OF 30 QUART BOTTLES.
BOUQUE FILS & CO., SOLE AGENTS,
43 BROADST., NEW-YORK.

have made a show of force. That's all I want, to proceed legally against all of you. Any one having business with the city will find me still as Mayor, and now I will transfer the Mayor's office to No. 112 Front-st."

"If you continue to act as Mayor I shall have you arrested!" exclaimed Mayor Sanford.

"Very well, do as you please, for I shall so continue," was the response.

Gleason then withdrew. Chief Woods offered to escort him, but the offer was refused. Gleason went at once to his office on Front-st., where he proceeded to transact business as Mayor. As soon as Gleason had left the building, the storming party visited the rooms of the Board of Education, and took possession. Superintendent Farlee, who was suspended by Gleason a few days ago, was removed by Sanford's order. Mr. Sanford, as Commissioner of Public Works, Chief Casey, of the Fire Department, who was removed by Gleason on Friday, was also removed.

Mr. Gleason was seen in his Front-st. office, and said: "Today's disgraceful scene marked the end of the old Mayor's rule. I have no voice on my of Long Island City. There will be no violence on my part, and I am sure I will eventually win in the court."

When Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him. Mr. Gleason bought a ticket, and the men did likewise. He went to the ticket collector's window and bought a ticket for Newark. Mr. Gleason, however, had a ticket for Trenton. He sat down near the door and the men took separate seats near him. Just as the train started out, Mr. Gleason walked to the rear of the train and the men followed him. Instead, however, of returning to the train shed, Mr. Gleason boarded a ferryboat for this city, and in the crowd on this side left his two shadowers and boarded the returning boat to Jersey City, which he reached just in time to catch the Trenton train. Mr. Gleason and his two men were seen by the Jersey City Hal and are to be married next week, and it was in order to spend today with her and her parents that he went to Trenton.

As the men did not go to the ticket collector's window, Mr. Gleason closed his office at No. 112 Front-st. yesterday he crossed the thirty-fourth street ferry to New-York, on his way to Trenton. For some time he went, but paid no attention to it until yesterday morning, when Captain Woods was clearing the Mayor's office of the crowd. When he looked upon the men leaving, some of them displayed凶器 and badges, and to Gleason's mind the whole thing was explained. The men had been ordered by the Sanford partisans to watch him. When he entered the thirty-fourth street ferry, on the Long Island side he saw two of the men and jumped overboard. He sat down near the door and the men passed through to the forward deck, while the other remained in the cabin. They followed him across the ferry, and entered the Jersey Central ferryhouse close behind him